The tradition of the Christmas log

After head chef Mr. Bakewell discovers Anthony's sister and her two friends hiding in the pantry of the Château Frontenac's kitchen, Anthony and the other assistant pastry chefs can only watch helplessly as the featured dessert for the hotel's inaugural Christmas dinner is ruined. But Anthony's clumsy error, which he follows up with an unusual suggestion, enables the chef to whip up a culinary masterpiece worthy of becoming a seasonal tradition: the Christmas Log.

The Christmas stocking tale.

Two mice, Kit and Tuffy, have only Christmas Eve to find the ingredients they need to concoct medicine for their little brother Skip, who is very ill. With the help of three orphans who Mrs. Holts has taken in for this memorable night, they manage to avoid the terrible traps set by her son, George, and his cat, Mats. In the confusion, a Christmas tradition is born: the Christmas stocking.

The kiss under the mistletoe

While living contentedly with the director of an orphanage named Marianne, three orphans from a single family – Alice, Albert and Arthur – have the rug pulled out from under them. The Milots, a foreign couple from a distant land, adopt the two boys, leaving Alice behind. The little girl is beside herself, but her brothers reassure her that they will soon be reunited again. On the night before Christmas, the two boys carry out their plan and run away into the forest, where they get lost in the dark, cold, snowy night. With the help of Betty the mare, Galley the seagull, Captain Graig and Marianne, Alice leaves in search of them after the mistletoe works its magic.

The legend of the Christmas tree

Seven-year-old William's best friends are three trees and three animals, who all live near the village church. Although two of the trees, Fir Tree and Apple Tree, have a tendency to quarrel, harmony generally prevails. Until the day, that is, that the local priest announces plans to expand the church... meaning that Fir Tree will most likely have to be cut down. What follows is a wonderful story of friendship and togetherness – and the birth of an unforgettable legend!
