Their game, their black jersey, their Haka, their history ... So many parameters that make this team a contemporary myth.

Through a journey into the heart of the great nations of rugby we are reaping the testimonies of those who met the All Blacks on the field and those preparing to face them. There is no other country where rugby has a status as important in a society. New Zealand's image which is related to the sport and this team.

No team can say they do not fear them, seldom players does not feel the tension before the game, because the All Blacks leaves no one indifferent. The New Zealand men's national rugby union team is called the All Blacks. They won the inaugural Rugby World Cup, are the leading points scorers of all time and the only international rugby team with a winning record against every test nation they have ever played. Since the IRB World Rankings was put forward in 2003, They have held the top ranking in the for longer than all other countries combined. In over 100 years, they have only been beaten in Test matches by seven international teams, out of the twenty they have played.

Six months from the World Cup where the All Blacks are designated as Top favorite by all nations who play this great mass of the oval ball, they are South Africans, Australians, Argentinians, Fiji, French or British, Everyone has a story, an emotion, a feeling against the All Blacks of New Zealand who, in 100 years, have not lost their black magic. A look at All Blacks, an approach to the myth of the legends of yesterday and today.
